

I would like to take this time to apologize for the issues that were caused by the hosting company that this website is deployed on. Unfortunately, some things are out of my control and frustrate me just as much as you when the site is not performing as you want.

Moving forward, I am confident that these types of interruptions will be minimal. I do have some planned outages for the site in order to make it more efficient and effective, but will let each of you know when these will occur.

Once again, I apologize for the inconveniences caused by the outage, and look forward to making this site with the assistance of you, and guidance of CCADV, one of the easiest and resourceful sites for aiding you in the fight against Domestic Violence.

Respectfully,
